Hello Bonnie –

Wonderful idea, and how great that you took the initiative, got everyone inspired, and started the process – a true leader!

If I can be helpful in planning and making the reunion happen, please let me know.
If appropriate, I would love to attend the reunion as well.

The mindfulness for judges retreat in Florida last week went well (33 participants) and we are SOOOO happy that it was scheduled for last week and not this week!!!!

Have a nice weekend,
Yvonne

Subject: RE: Woods Hole Follow-Up

Anyone interested in scheduling a "reunion" next year with additional presentations on the topic? Obviously this time we, or our agencies, would have to fund our own travel and expenses, but I thought some might be okay with that. I was thinking we might try to return to Woods Hole, since that's where the academics are. (We go to them, rather than have them come to us.)

Let me know if there is interest in doing this, and, if so, I'll try to keep the momentum going.

Dear Judicial Leaders in Climate Science,

We left Woods Hole feeling so impressed with your commitment and engagement with the issues related to climate science and the law! We really loved getting to spend time with you and hearing your unique perspectives. And perhaps most of all, we were thrilled with the momentum you built and your interest in staying in touch with this group and continuing to learn together and share ideas.

Email Group

We already have specific follow-ups planned with a number of you, but we also heard your strong interest in a forum for staying in touch and sharing information. We have created a listserv on Groups.io called CliSciLeaders and will send invitations shortly. (Groups.io is a service that allows communication in private groups on their own subdomain; it has multiple email delivery options and fully searchable archives, including searching within attachments.)

If you would like us to add you to the group using another email address, send us the email you would like us to use. If you do not want to be included in the group, please let us know or simply ignore the invitation email.

To share anything with the group (once you have accepted the Groups.io invitation), simply send an email to CliSciLeaders [REDACTED]. That email will go to everyone in the group. The welcome email from Groups.io will have instructions on adjusting notifications settings. If you have any questions about how this works, don't hesitate to reach out!

News

In the spirit of information sharing, we also wanted to share a few updates on topics we discussed in Woods Hole.

- The Virginia youth climate rights case that Sandy and Jarryd referenced in their presentation, Layla H. v. Commonwealth of Virginia, Circuit Court for the City of Richmond, No. CL22000632-00, was recently dismissed by a Virginia state court.
- Here's an article about the incident with brain-eating amoeba and the death of a child, that was referenced by Judge Harmon during our first session.

Resource Materials

A number of presentations were revised after the creation of the E-Binder and some other reading materials were made available. In case you wanted the final versions, those materials are available here:

Dear Climate Science Leaders,

Thanks again for joining the listserv! We wanted to share one recent decision from the U.S. District Court in Maryland.

As discussed in Woods Hole, there is a wave of cases filed by states, cities, and municipalities against fossil fuel companies alleging state common law and consumer protection causes of action. Here, Judge Stephanie Gallagher granted the City of Annapolis and Anne Arundel County's motions to remand the cases back to state court where they were originally filed. While climate science was not mentioned explicitly, the opinion discussed climate impacts. Namely, that plaintiffs' alleged harms stem from a tenfold increase in nuisance flooding events that result in business closures and damage to property (see pg. 6). These flooding events are a clear signal of climate change.

The opinion, as well as an article from E&E News about the decision, are attached.

Have a great weekend!

Dear Judicial Leaders in Climate Science,

When we were together at Woods Hole, we discussed holding a check-in webinar at which we would review your completed action plans in October. On reflection, we decided to wait a few months before reconvening to give everyone time to continue to work on this. In the meantime, we do nonetheless want to harness the momentum through action planning--and action! Reviewing action plans or reports will also help us to shape the agenda for the web check-in.

Remember, your action plans don't need to be perfect or comprehensive, but they should reflect your thinking up to this point and the next steps needed to advance your plan. If you anticipate any barriers to meeting this timeline, please let us know.

Dear Judges,

I hope everyone had a Happy Thanksgiving!

As Judge Scheele kindly mentioned two weeks ago, CJP and NJC are co-sponsoring an upcoming webinar, Hurricanes in a Changing Climate and Related Litigation, on December 1, which will feature Dr. Kerry Emanuel and Hawai'i Supreme Court Chief Justice Mark Recktenwald. I have inserted the posting for the webinar to this email for your convenience. We wanted to ask if you might share this with your relevant judicial education leads so that it can be made available to any interested judges outside of our network.

Hurricanes in a Changing Climate and Related Litigation

A growing number of lawsuits associated with climate-driven impacts are challenging governments and business for failure to prepare for the foreseeable harms to people and infrastructure, such as those caused by cyclonic storms.

Dear Judicial Leaders,

I hope your 2023 is off to a great start! Thanks so much for sending us your action plans; we're excited to see the directions you are going.

We're also excited to let you know that you can now find the majority of teaching modules for the Climate Judiciary Project curriculum at our website, <https://www.eli.org/climate-judiciary-project>. Once there, click the drop-down arrow next to "Climate Science and Law for Judges Curriculum" to find materials on the following topics:

- How Climate Science Works
- What is Causing Climate Change?
- Impacts of Climate Change
- Climate Justice (coming soon)
- Risks and Costs of Climate Change
- Drawing the Causal Chain: The Detection and Attribution of Climate Change (coming soon)
- Solving the Climate Change Problem (coming soon)
- Overview of Climate Litigation
- Applying Attribution: Impacts of Climate Attribution Science on Tort Litigation

- Government Action and Climate Science
- Fundamental Rights
- Procedural Techniques Available for Climate Litigation
- Judicial Remedies for Climate Disruption (coming soon)

These modules are designed and written specifically with judges in mind, so we hope you will explore them, and more importantly that you will find them useful! We very much would appreciate any feedback about which modules you and your colleagues are most interested in. We'll be following up with you individually to see about additional dissemination and educational opportunities surrounding the curriculum.

Keep up the great work!

Hi Peter,

Yes! Please feel free to pass any of these modules on to your colleagues! Currently available are the white papers, however we plan to add video content over time. We're planning to launch a more comprehensive resource website for all this curriculum content later this spring and will keep you apprised when that is available.

Subject: RE: Woods Hole Follow-Up

Anyone interested in scheduling a "reunion" next year with additional presentations on the topic? Obviously this time we, or our agencies, would have to fund our own travel and expenses, but I thought some might be okay with that. I was thinking we might try to return to Woods Hole, since that's where the academics are. (We go to them, rather than have them come to us.)

Let me know if there is interest in doing this, and, if so, I'll try to keep the momentum going.

Dear Judicial Leaders in Climate Science

We left Woods Hole feeling so impressed with your commitment and engagement with the issues related to climate science and the law! We really loved getting to spend time with you and hearing your unique perspectives. And perhaps most of all, we were thrilled with the momentum you built and your interest in staying in touch with this group and continuing to learn together and share ideas.

Email Group

We already have specific follow-ups planned with a number of you, but we also heard your strong interest in a forum for staying in touch and sharing information. We have created a listserv on Groups.io called CliSciLeaders and will send invitations shortly. (Groups.io is a service that allows communication in private groups on their own subdomain; it has multiple email delivery options and fully searchable archives, including searching within attachments.)

If you would like us to add you to the group using another email address, send us the email you would like us to use. If you do not want to be included in the group, please let us know or simply ignore the invitation email.

To share anything with the group (once you have accepted the Groups.io invitation), simply send an email to CliSciLeaders [REDACTED]. That email will go to everyone in the group. The welcome email from Groups.io will have instructions on adjusting notifications settings. If you have any questions about how this works, don't hesitate to reach out!

News

In the spirit of information sharing, we also wanted to share a few updates on topics we discussed in Woods Hole.

- The Virginia youth climate rights case that Sandy and Jarryd referenced in their presentation, Layla H. v. Commonwealth of Virginia, Circuit Court for the City of Richmond, No. CL22000632-00, was recently dismissed by a Virginia state court.
- Here's an article about the incident with brain-eating amoeba and the death of a child, that was referenced by Judge Harmon during our first session.

Resource Materials

A number of presentations were revised after the creation of the E-Binder and some other reading materials were made available. In case you wanted the final versions, those materials are available here:

As Erin mentioned in her email last week, we will follow up in the coming weeks about your actions plans and scheduling the next virtual meeting. In the meantime, we look forward to staying in touch!

Best regards,

Sarah
